Camp Springs Discusses Dementia Prevention

By Leon Turner

Prince George's County Executive Rushern Baker speaks at the CSCA Community meeting.

Ms. Gloria Lawlah, former head of Maryland's Department of Aging, introduced County Executive Rushern Baker at the Sept 14 CSCA community meeting and praised him for his extensive efforts both personally with his wife (who suffers from dementia) and his work for Prince George's County. Following a video by the CSCA, Ms. Lawlah and Mr. Baker shared valuable information on this disease and answered audience questions.

Dementia is a brain disorder that "is expanding" says Mr. Baker. It causes memory loss and can progress to a full incapacity to routinely function. Baker recalled when his wife got dementia in early 2010. He noticed something was not quite right and she could not remember their children's ages or when they were born. He said, "there was no medication; you must just live."

Now County Executive Baker attends to his wife, 48 years old, daily before going to work and returning home. "She has no ability to do anything; she cannot walk and is non-verbal." He has had to rotate shifts with the family to care for her and said that "every day is different."

Mr. Baker talked about the Dementia Friendly America Initiative (Initiative) started by the White House Conference on Aging. It is a national effort to provide supportive options and foster quality of life for persons with dementia. Thanks to Baker's efforts, Prince George's County is one of six communities, nationwide to participate in the Initiative. The objective is to promote dementia friendly communities across the nation that will support those living with dementia and their caregivers and families.

According to the Department of Family Services, "this disease is especially significant with the aging of our community. Of the 900,000 Prince George's County residents, 144,000 are 60 years and older and over 9,655 are over age 85."

Baker said that President Obama recognized that we must be aware and be prepared to deal with Alzheimer's and dementia. We must raise money for research and raise awareness. He encouraged those with early symptoms to get more active and keep the mind sharp to delay it.

Gateway Second Chance is Helping Youth Succeed

The Gateway Second Chance Foundation is a non-profit organization committed to giving under-served, at-risk teenage boys-who have been identified by juvenile justice, foster care, the police and other social agencies – a second chance to modify behavior, and become productive members of society.”
